Myra Mormile-Wolper is a seasoned business and financial regulatory lawyer and commercial litigator licensed in Illinois and Georgia. Myra represents financial service entities including broker-dealers and investment advisers, as well as financial advisers and registered representatives in compliance matters; state, SEC, and FINRA regulatory investigations and enforcement proceedings; customer litigation and arbitration; and employment disputes.

With 15 years of professional practice, Myra has amassed a successful track record in general counsel and senior in-house counsel roles. Myra was instrumental in the formation and implementation of a Legal, Compliance and AML-Fraud department for an online brokerage firm. Additionally, she provided legal counsel and training on information security, incident response and open source software for a multi-billion dollar financial services firm providing online investing, brokerage and banking services to millions of retail investors. Myra has substantial experience serving as a financial services litigator and regulatory counsel, often representing clients in state and federal courts, arbitration, negotiations, witness preparation, depositions, and on-the-record interviews.

Myra approaches every engagement with utmost pragmatism focused on getting to the right business decision for the client. She applies creative strategies to ensure business objectives are met while working within the regulatory confines of the financial services industry. Importantly, Myra is extremely responsive and places great value on making each client feel like their matter is of the highest priority.
